

Elfa Décor Freestanding Closets

Subject Line: “I KNEW that latch would never hold!”

Hi _____. It’s Karen here, from Organizing Savvy.

Got a quick question for you. Are you a fan of the comic strip “Peanuts?” I certainly am. I don’t know which quirky character I like the most--the fussy budget Lucy, the philosopher Linus, the Flying Ace Snoopy, or the lovable loser Charlie Brown.

In one of these endearing cartoons, Snoopy is lazily hanging out on the roof of his doghouse when his ears perk up to a sudden loud “SNAP”, followed by a violent shaking beneath him.

In a panic, the scared doggie nearly flies off the roof.

When the rumbling stops, and he composes himself on the roof again, he discovers that all the commotion was just his doggie door latch busting loose, letting his pile of treasures erupt from the little house he had stuffed full.

From his rooftop perch, Snoopy assesses his things now scattered all over the ground.

Matter of factly he muses: “I KNEW that latch would never hold!”

While Snoopy’s predicament makes me chuckle, it also reminds me of my ongoing dilemma with closet storage—How do I store all my stuff so I can get to what I need when I need it.

Take my bedroom closet for example...

If only I had one of those dream closets in my bedroom--you know--like you see on the TV show “House Hunters.” Where the wife smugly tells her hubby (as she twirls around in a walk-in closet the size of Rhode Island) that it MIGHT be big enough to hold her stuff, but he’ll have to use the one down the hall.

However, my closet doesn’t come close to that.

When I hang up my clothes or search for something to wear, I have to climb onto a footstool to reach the stuff hanging over my head.

Then while tottering a foot or so off the floor, I push and shove the clothes along the bar while straining to reach that pink blouse that's sandwiched between 6 others.

It's really quite a feat.

Does any of this sound painfully familiar to you?
