

Masterpiece Doors

Subject Line: What's behind Door # 1?

Hi _____. It's Karen here, from "Welcome Home"

I was just remembering one of my favorite TV game shows.

Remember "Let's Make a Deal?" It was one of the most popular game shows back in the 60's and 70's.

In fact, it was such a hit that they've created a modern version for today's TV audience.

The original show went like this: People in ridiculous costumes competed to attract the attention of the host, Monty Hall.

He would choose someone from the crowd and offer them a deal.

It might be just a small box at first—nothing too impressive.

Next, he would ask if they wanted to keep the box or trade it away (without looking inside first) for a prize behind the curtain.

Contestants struggled to decide whether to hold on to the box, in case there was something really cool inside, or to go for it and trade it away, with hopes of winning something bigger and better.

Could that unimportant looking box be holding an expensive camera or even a thousand dollars?

Maybe... But what if they passed up something really exciting like a hot-tub or a motorcycle?

Decisions, decisions...

Would they make the right choice and be a big winner or get ZONKED and go home with something completely worthless?

The suspense grew when those that were lucky enough to win a valuable prize in the first round got another chance to trade—this time for a shot at the BIG DEAL OF THE DAY hidden behind one of three mysterious doors.

Was the big deal behind DOOR #1? Or DOOR # 2? Or was it behind DOOR # 3?

There was never a clunker behind any of these doors, though it was possible to end up with something less valuable than what they already had.

But if they picked the RIGHT door they could win a fantastic prize, like a trip to Hawaii or even a NEW CAR.

Recalling the fun of watching this show made me wonder a bit about our irresistible fascination with closed doors and what might lie behind them.

This fascination is one reason I enjoy looking at homes and admiring front doors with character.

A charming entryway intrigues me. It invites me to walk through it and see what's beyond.

Front doors tell a lot about the people that live there, offering a peek into their personality and lifestyle.

Your front door and the area around it is the focal point of your home's curb appeal. It's here that you welcome the world to your home.

If you're trying to sell your home, realtors will tell you that your entryway should say: "Come inside" to potential buyers.

Stand back. Take a moment to look at your home's front door.

What does it say to visitors?

Does it invite them to enter and enjoy what's inside?

Or is it boring, tired and in need of a makeover?

Are you ready to take your entry from drab to delightful?
